Jerald P. Pederson is a vice president of API CONSTRUCTION CO., a position he has held since 1989.

Pederson's career with APi began in 1975 when he accepted the position of head draftsman, in which he oversaw and produced technical construction drawings for customer approval.

After a short stay in that role, Pederson was assigned duties to assist various project managers at the company until he accepted a two-year commitment in 1978 as field manager at a major coal-fired power plant in the Midwest.

Upon the completion of that assignment, Pederson returned to the St. Paul, Minn. home office and assumed the role of project manager and later senior project manager until he was appointed a company officer and a vice president of construction in 1989, a title he holds today.

Pederson attended North Hennepin Jr. College and Southwest Minnesota State College, and has completed courses related to architecture and machine design. He has been married for more than 30 years and has two married daughters. ⚙️
