Jim Torborg is president of LEJEUNE STEEL CO., a premier steel fabricator with an output capacity of more than 40,000 tons of structural steel per year.

Torborg's 27-year career has included stops within many different facets of the construction industry that led to the key leadership role at LeJeune Steel.

Torborg worked for a national industrial general contractor for 19 years. He began as a quality control manager and then served as a field engineer, project manager, project superintendent, and finally worked within the business development group.

In 2001 Torborg joined the APi Group. He worked on business improvement initiatives and in 2004 was named president of LeJeune Steel Co., and became president of Doody Mechanical, another subsidiary of APi.

Today, Torborg's primary business focus is to develop a culture of continuous improvement through leadership, mentoring, and business process improvement.✪
